A FRAGMENT.

BY "ESCHYLUS."

- For the glance Of melancholy is a fearful gift; What is it but the telescope of truth? Which strips thy future of its phantasies; And brings life near in utter nakedness, Making the cold reality too real.-BYRON.

I was sad! I knew not why! My thoughts ere tinged with gloom, and each exertion to dispel my sadness, vainly ended, leaving my mind folded more closely in its shroud of sombreness.

It was a strange and indefinable feeling a chaos of shade 'without form and void' -a phantom of gloom, dim and indistinct, all unrecognised by the mind's eye; yet the soul 'felt' its poisonous breath wreath round the flowers of Hope, and in its deadly aroma their perfume wast lost, and their beauteous hues gradually faded, 'till nought was seen but the withering leaves robed in its misty hues of darkness. Who can solve the mystery of mind? Who can fathom the depths of the soul's deep ocean, and from its immeasurable caves pluck its hid-den treasures, the unpolished, priceless gems; its vast, its infinite, its exhaustless stores? In its darkest caverns of gloom it doth conceal jewels of the brightest lustre; whose dazzling scintillations are all absorbin the surrounding mist. Anon we see the light of one of the brightest heave its way up through the opposing waves, retaining all its glittering brightness till on the loftiest billow its strange and fitful glare for an in-stant lingers, and then, like a meteor, vanishes away, consumed by its own resplendency.

I was sad! I cannot tell what others think, but to me the hours of melancholy are the happiest I experience; and in my darkest mood, I feel like a soul reft of its clay, and like an unfettered bird I fly, songless but thoughtful, from world to world, forgetful of all things living, devouring with my greedy sight the untold beauties of the world of thought.

I was sad ! and in this mood I wandered forth to gaze upon the face of nature thro' this 'telescope of truth,' and mark all its living colors tinged with my gloominess. Onward I went, without an aim; smileless and silent. The face of nature was serene and wreathed with half-born smiles, like the smile of Spring; when the carnation of health was struggling with winter's palor.

Before me, on my way, I saw one leading by the hand two little babes, whose feet scarce obeyed their wishes; for, full of untutored feet delayed their steps. His mien was one of careless unalloyed joy; and he sauntered along with a happy ease, listening with delight to the merry prattle of his infants' voices; to whose enquiring eyes the book of nature unfolded each day a new the book of nature unfolded each day and the book of nature unfolded each day a new the book of nature unfold and Crockeryware, Cutlery, Hollow-ware of every variety, Shovels and Tongs, Carpets, Brooms, Brushes, Willow and Woodenware; with a variety of articles too numerous to mention. apr 16 fered in this market, can be had by the car load, or smaller quantity, at J. Alas ! alas ! his happiness doth make me doubly sad.

I passed him by; but my thoughts dwelt partments of the government. upon that happy father, till, almost in envy, I wished I were a father too. I passed him by; but he was still with me in my walk; by; but he was still with me in my walk; and the picture of wedded bliss was ever before my eyes, and through its medium I Dollars! saw my own misery, till it changed to anguish. I passed him by; but a something stole over my soul, and a gentle whisper did reveal that I should see him yet again, and his face should tell me of his heart. It tar, and swept my fingers over its chords, and, as though answering to my mood, the Philadelphia Shoe Shore, corner of 11th and F ats spirit of melancholy breathed upon its may 21-eod3m and of hounted strains, and as its cadence rose my overburthened soul burst forth in song.

Weep! when thy heart is joyful, weep! Weep April showers! It waketh from their wintry sleep, The hearf's sweet flowers

Ween, when thy heart is crush'd by woe, And grief's waves roll— When sorrow's winds tempestuous blow-'Twill ease thy soul.

Weep, when thy breast, 'neath loves hot sun, '!
Is scorched and dry;
If moist'ning showers fell not upon
Thy heart, 't would die!

Weep ever! for there's not an hour and you Tears will not cease; In bringing forth the heart's sweet flower— In giving peace.

My song was hushed; my heart was sad; my head was bowed upon my hand. Again I heard the melancholy toses of my guitar—only they seemed like a wail over the departed; my heart stilled its pulsations, shrinking in fear at the wild and mystic melody. I heard a voice sing the same song. It was my own, and yet I knew that I sang not; but my greedy ears drank in the sorrowful cadence, till they heard—the-could hear nought else. Oh, how inex-pressibly sad, and deep, and wild, were those witching strains! It seemed as though some lost spirit was hovering by, and, sweeping over the strings with a master's hand, howled forth in melody his wail of despair. A spell was upon me. My frame was rigid as a statue. I seemed to gaze upon my unconscious form as though my soul had deserted its home, and it lay before me, breathing, yet senseless; I heard, saw, thought, felt, and acted as a spirit.

The song was hushed; but, wrapt in a trance, I stood unconscious, with my head bent forward to catch the least faint echo of those delicious strains, They had ceased, and I heard them no more. Suddenly I felt an insensible longing to gaze upon that happy father, and in that spiritu-al shape dive to the hidden cause of his happiness, and profit thereby; for I felt as though I was upon the eve of learning some great truth-some divine preceptwhose remembrance would cling to me through life. To be continul.
